Reflection

Finding or looking for a company that fits your skillset is not as easy as students or other people might think. I feel like a lost employee seeking a job, overwhelmed by the pressure, stress, and anxiety that flood my mind every time there's a job or internship offer. Despite submitting numerous applications, many of them go unanswered. But I didn't stop seeking for the company; in fact, I made a plan. I applied to internship roles that were opposite to my skillset. In four years of studying in field of computer science, I always code, analyze, and research about the topic. So, I apply to the opposite side of it which is more on hardware or computer parts.

I overcame the stress, anxiety, and pressure when SM Investments Corporation accepted me as their intern for a technical support role, where I'll be handling more on the computer parts or hardware side, which is opposite to my skillset. However, I am knowledgeable about this role since I once built my own personal computer and have experience with cleaning hardware machines. I was ecstatic the day when SMIC accepted me. I had doubted whether anyone would accept me as an intern, but their decision gave me a renewed sense of confidence and excitement for the opportunity ahead.

During my first day as an intern at SMIC, I learned various things that I thought I already knew. I learned how to configure laptops and desktops in a perfect and time-efficient manner, and this task was repeated for 1 to 2 weeks. After spending weeks configuring laptops, my supervisor asked me to deploy one of the laptops that I had configured. I really like this part because I could practice my communication skills, which is my weakness. It was a rewarding experience to apply what I had learned and to improve my weaker areas while contributing to the technical support team's objectives.

I realized that communication plays a significant role in a company; if you know how to effectively communicate with others, you will gain their attention and respect. This became evident to me while supporting a legal team, where most people were on the lawyer side. I felt comfortable talking with them and didn't hesitate to answer because they encouraged me to respond to their questions. This experience greatly boosted my communication skills. Interacting with professionals in a different field not only improved my ability to articulate ideas but also increased my confidence in engaging with different audiences within the company. And I learned that from Sir Miggie and Sir Johnray. I have enjoyed this so much that's why time comes so fast. I didn't notice that I have rendered 400 hours with them. I will be missing to support the client/employees in their technical issues. I am so grateful that I was once part of technical support team at SMIC.

This week didn't make me feel tired; I enjoyed it as a member of the Technical Support Group. I assisted multiple clients with their printers, reformatted desktops, manually checked MAC addresses of telephones and printers, and set up laptops.

As my last week in my internship as Technical Support, I feel both happy and sad. I'm happy because I completed my 400 hours of internship, and sad because I will miss the environment, the learning opportunities, the tasks, my supervisors, and the users that I helped or supported during my internship.

Here's a summary of my activities from day 56 to day 60:

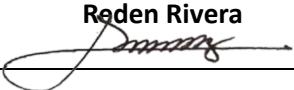

Day 56: Authorized Absent

Day 57: Configuration of desktop and setting up, Support multiple users regarding their printers.

Day 58: Manual checking of telephone and printer's mac address.

Day 59: Assist users regarding their desktop and printer.

Day 60: Deploy multiple laptops and printer. And assist user in technical issues.
